Read the problems and give advice using the second conditional.

1. I enjoy driving very much. I passed my driving test six months ago and believe I'm a very safe and responsible driver. But, over the last month I've had a recurring nightmare. It involves having an accident in a red car. Yesterday was my birthday. My parents bought me a beautiful new car. It is red. Should I listen to my dreams or am I overreacting?

2. I'm engaged to be married in a month's time. We've planned the wedding and we've paid for everything. I love my boyfriend very much, and both our families are very happy with the union. But, on two separate occasions I've seen my fiancé in public with my best friend Jenny. My fiancé and Jenny have never told me about their meetings. They have kept them secret. I'm very confused. What should I do?

3. Everybody at school believes I'm a straight A student. I always get top marks from all my teachers and have received prizes and awards for my work. My parents are very proud of me, but there's a problem. My sister has done a lot of the work for me. I've copied all her projects and papers. My final exams will take place in two months. What am I going to do? I don't want to disappoint my teachers or my parents.

4. I met a guy at school and we get along well. We study together and go out for coffee and stuff like that. We've become good friends. The problem is that I first met him when I was dating another guy. Now that guy and I have broken up. Now I'd like to date the guy from school. We have a lot of things in common. He knows that I've broken up with my boyfriend. What can I do to show him I'm interested?
