Let's Shop!

Julia Choi, 22, loves Hello Kitty. She shows off the popular Japanese cartoon character—a white kitten with a pink hair bow—everywhere in her apartment. She has pens and pencils, clothing, towels, a shower curtain, dishes, clocks, a TV/DVD player, a computer, and over 300 stuffed animals. She picks up a pink guitar. "I saved up for a year to buy this. The store sold out of them in two hours. I bought it online."

What's her excuse for buying so many Hello Kitty items? "I don't need an excuse," she says. "I love Hello Kitty. Having Hello Kitty things around me makes me feel good. It's my money." Will she ever quit collecting? "Probably not," she admits. "If I get married, I'll spend less money on Hello Kitty. But I won't give her up. I can't do without her. If someone marries me, he'll marry my collection, too."

Matt Anderson, 21, doesn't just collect one thing. He'll buy anything if he likes it. His apartment is filled with his purchases. "If I'm in a store, and I see a cool watch, I'll buy it. If I see a pair of jeans or T-shirt that look great, I'll get them," he explains. "Last week, I bought a backpack over the Internet. I know the company ripped me off—it was an expensive bag and poor quality. But I liked the color, so I kept it." He worries, though. "I can spend my whole paycheck in a week. I do worry sometimes that I'll wind up broke. I'd like to cut back on buying things. And my roommate might kick me out if I don't get rid of some stuff. The apartment is pretty full."

Julia and Matt have different spending personalities. "Self-expressive buyers" like Julia, collect things that reflect their personality. "Impulsive buyers" like Matt, don't plan their purchases, and they shop without self-control.

Answers will vary. Suggested answers:

2. She said she had bought it online.
3. She said she didn't need and excuse.
4. She said she loved Hello Kitty....
5. She said if she got married, she would spend less money on Hello Kitty.
